MEMORIES OF FARM LIFE.

Thoughts of a Boy of Ten as Related by Him When a Man of Sixty-Six.

At 5:30 a. m. the boy is perched on the barnyard fence, impatiently waiting for the "hired man" and "hired girl" to finish milking the cows. The boy dangles his bare feet to drive away the mosquitoes, while he uses both hands to relieve the itching and burning caused by the invisible "no-see-ems," says Forest and Stream. He looks at the mud nests under the eaves, and wonders why the swallows desert the cliffs when barns appear in the wilderness. "It shows sense, anyway," he muttters to him-

Before the milkers are out of the yard the boy jumps off the fence; the straight spruce bars rattle to the ground, and the cows pass out, one by one, with a clicking of toes on the lowermost bar. The boy puts up the bars, then waits for something to happen. "Old Short Legs," the leader of the herd, braces herself, throws up her head, and sends out a blast that causes the air to vibrate, and the boy to wonder, for the hundredth time, what it is all about.

Down the hill through the narrow lane the boy follows the cows, listening to the rattling of hoofs, while he wonders why cows have split hoofs and the horses round. The end of the lane is soon reached. The boy drops the bars, and as they rattle to the ground he hears another boy letting down bars in the edge of the woods across a burnt land clover field. But the boy does not care for echoes this June morning; it is bird life that claims his undivided attention.

Down by the brook in the alder grounds blackbirds are sending up a wild chorus. On all sides the boy hears the songs of native birds. The loud carol of the robin, the clear notes of the song sparrow, the tender strain of the Peabody bird, the rich, rollicking roundelay of the bobolink, the sweet, canary-like trill of the thistle bird, and over in the burnt land clover field the sprightly song of the house wren arises from many a blackened stump. Why the little bird was called house wren was beyond the boy's knowledge. He had never found a nest near a house, while nearly every hollow stump in pasture and field had its tenants. (Years later the wrens disappeared with the hollow stumps, but in that locality-northern Mainedid not build in or around farm buildings.) The boy visited several robin nests in the pasture. The nests were all in the roots of upturned trees. The boy wondered what the robins would do when there were no upturned trees. The boy climbed over the rail fence into the clover field. He was no stranger to the birds; he had provided breadcrumbs and nesting material, so the birds did not resent his curiosity. Two mornings before he had saved the eggs of a pair of house wrens by killing a large striped snake that had made its way to the top of the nesting stump. It was this nest towards which he struggled through the tangled clover.

If the birds did not resent his visit the bumblebees did. The bumblebees, little and big, thronged the clover field, and a scent of honey was in the dew-laden air, but the boy could not tell whether it came from the bees or from the sweet clover blossoms. He found nine eggs in the wren nest. They were rosy white, densely covered with brown dots and patches. The boy thought they looked like costly gems, such as his fairy books claimed for the prince and

While inspecting the wren's nest the boy thought of breakfast, and thereupon he climbed back to the lane, homeward bound. He did not follow the lane to the barn, but turned off to visit the spring at the foot of the hill. When he stooped down to quench his thirst there looked up to him a ten-year-old boy with round face, blue eyes, and a mass of curly brown hair.

To-day, 56 years later, the same boy knelt to drink from a Massachusetts spring. The face that looked up to him was the face of an old man, long and wrinkled. The blue eyes were there, but the mass of brown hair had disappeared, and thin white locks had taken its place.

and are compelled to shuffle along with that peculiar rythm of movement admirers all sorts of messages. which is quite their own.

Although a Japanese woman seems to be much more simply dressed than her western sister (and certainly she has reduced the number of her garments down to a very fine point), she is none the less a daughter of Eve in her love of personal adornment. For instance, every time her hair is taken down, two hours are spent in redressing it, and nothing would induce her to go to a picnic or to the theater without popping into the sleeve of her kimono her little dressing-case made of scarlet brocade, which contains her steel mirror and diminutive boxes of lip-salve, face powder and eyebrow renovator, nor would she go to her temple to pray if her obi did not sit just as an obi ought to sit, and has sat ever since they were adopted by her remote ancestors.

Undoubtedly with a Japanese woman the richness of her hair ornaments, and the splendor of her obi, constitute her chief vanities and extravagances in dress, and it is, after all, only in her short years of mousmeehood that she has much opportunity for annoying other women, or pleasing the opposite sex by the beauty and variety of these vanities of the flesh. Of the young wife, the husband demands that the wearing of her fine trousseau shall be reserved for his own and his parents' eyes only.

The older a woman grows, the sadder and duller her clothes become (as a child she is resplendent as a butterfly), and the less ostentatious the fine chignon of glossy black hair which she piles on the top of her head to proclaim her wifehood in the eyes of the world; and, alas! if she is left a widow, her fine head of hair is shaven off to show her desolation.

In Japan the wedding ring is not the the dressing of her hair, and not the length of her kimono sleeves. A mousmee must not have such long sleeves as a matron, and her hair is less elaborately dressed. The tying of an obi places a woman amongst the unclassed, but such a sight is never seen outside the limits of the Yoshiwara. or on the stage. Between the sexes in Japan there is very little difference in the main feattures of dress, and little children are only beautiful little miniatures of their parents, more gaily and richly dressed. A tiny girl may wear the richest embroideries and stiffest brocades of flaming scarlets and gold made in exactly the same way as the soft gray or brown kimono of her mother. In tiny children the distinction of sex is shown by the color of the clothes, not the style in which they are made. Boys wear yellow, girls red.

Under his kimono a man of the upper class wears a sort of kilted, divided skirt, something approaching the nature of trousers. This is called the hakama, and is always made of stiff silk. A woman wears, instead, an under-kimono. Both sexes wear two little aprons round the loins, called koshi-maki, and a sort of shirt called the suso-yoke, Neither a man's obi nor his hair are, of course, his glory and pride as they are with a woman; the narrow male sash is not an item of great importance, for although it is always made of rich silk, it is worn not so much for show as for use, to keep his kimono in place, and to serve as a waist-belt through which he can draw the rich chain and netsuke (button) of his tobacco and pipe-case, and if he is a merchant, his long-handled inkpot and pen-holder. In the severest weather both the sexes wear padded kimonos, and the men have a short haori, or over-jacket, which only reaches to about their knees. A woman's complete outfit costs much more than a man's, although the actual number of the garments she wears at one time are fewer. Prof. Chamberlain, in his "Things Japanese," says: "A Japanese lady's dress will often represent a value of $200, without counting the ornaments sign manual of a married woman, but for her hair. A woman of the smaller shop-keeping class may have on her, when she goes out holiday-making, some $40 or $50 worth. A gentieman will rarely spend on his clothes as much as he lets his wife spend on in front of the waist instead of behind hers. Perhaps he may not have on more than $60 worth. Thence, through a gradual decline in price, we come to the coolie's poor trappings, which may represent as little as five dollars, or even two dollars, as he stands."

Loser by Fire Thought Iced Drinks Should Have Hand-Grenades for Chasers.

"Fire insurance contains many surprises to the lay mind," said Marshall S. Driggs, president of the board of underwriters, according to the New York Sun. "One man who came to me for a policy on some ice houses which he had just acquired almost refused to credit our statements in explaining the high rate. Ice houses are extra nazardous risks because they are liable to spontaneous combustion. It happened in this case that the applicant received a telegram while we were still discussing the gram while we were still discussing the matter. He was informed that his new properties had burned to the ground. It chanced to be a very hot day and we adjourned for refreshments.

"'Why not a hot lemonade?' suggested the stricken ice house man.

"With the thermometer 99!' I protest-

"He waved his hand.
"Consider the risk! he said. The fire rate on ice is six, seven, even ten per cent. per annum. At least, if you are going to risk spontaneous incineration, you had better drink a few hand grenades for a chaser."

It takes a man with a new-fashioned appetite to bemoan the lack of old-fashioned cooking.—Chicago Tribune.

Always Food for Laughter.

When Johnny was a child they laughed at the ridiculous things he said. When he was a youth they laughed at his half-baked opinions. When he was a man they laughed at his wisdom because they couldn't grasp it. When he was old they laughed at him for a can't. There is always some one to for a crank. There is always some one to laugh, and this is a jolly world.—Newark (N. J.) News.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Thompson, of Lillydale, N.Y., Grand Worthy Wise Templar, and Member of W.C.T.U., tells how she recovered by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am one of the many of your grateful friends who have been cured through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and who can to-day thank you for the fine health I enjoy. When I was thirty-five years old, I suffered severe backache and frequent bearing-down pains; in fact, I had womb trouble I was very anxious to get well, and reading of the cures your Compound had made, I decided to try it. I took only six bottles, but it built me up and cured me entirely of my troubles.

"My family and relatives were naturally as gratified as I was. My niece had heart trouble and nervous prostration, and was considered incurable. She took your Vegetable Compound and it cured her in a short time, and she became well and strong, and her home to her great joy and her hus-band's delight was blessed with a baby. I know of a number of others who have been cured of different kinds of female trouble, and am satisfied that your Compound is the best medicine for sick women." — MRS. ELIZABETH H.
